PUBLICATIONS

My research program integrates diverse approaches to primate ecology. It is field-based, focuses on long-lived organisms, and can require years of data collection for publication. Along with my trainees, I lead analyses of behavioural and population ecology, and my expertise is sought by other research groups in these areas. I have also built these interdisciplinary collaborations to more effectively address complex research questions in ecology and evolution.

I make it a high priority to include trainees whenever they can contribute ideas, data, or analyses. Students are first authors for papers based on research that they lead (usually thesis). As head of the lab, I am usually last (senior) author; I may also offer senior position to heads of labs where my students have trained and conducted analyses. To promote their recognition and networking, students are almost exclusively given presenting author position on conference papers. My position on articles led by collaborators depends on the extent of my contribution – typically among the first few or last few when most substantive in ideas or analyses.

To reach our peers, we publish in high-impact disciplinary journals (e.g., American Journal of Primatology, Scopus CiteScore 4.5; American Journal of Biological Anthropology, CS 4.8) or more widely in biology and ecology (e.g., Global Change Biology, CS 21.5; BioScience, CS 14.1; Biological Conservation, CS 10.2; Journal of Applied Ecology, CS 9.8). For our highest profile contributions, we target major, broad-interest venues such as Science (CS 61.1), Nature Climate Change (CS 40.3), Science Advances (CS 21.4), and Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the USA (CS 19.0).

According to Google Scholar, my h-index is 29 and 19 since 2019 (the shorter time frame somewhat reducing the bias in this metric). According to SciVal, my Field-Weighted Citation Impact is 2.10, indicating that my papers are cited 110% more than the global average for similar publications. Furthermore, a majority (58.1%) of my publications are in the top 10% most-cited journals (CiteScore), and 21.2% of my papers are in the top 10% of cited papers globally. My International Collaboration rate for publications is 97%.
